From DJ Booth to Music Production

A DJ since 1989 and a music producer since 1995, Paolo Aliberti has built his career across clubs, recording studios and international record projects. From his early days behind the decks to his first productions, a fascination with sound has driven him to explore every stage of the creative process.

With Pornocult, the project he co-founded with the late Alex Elle, he toured across Europe and South America. On June 23, 2010, he played the opening DJ set for Tiësto at the Beat Music Festival, held at the Reggia di Venaria Reale near Turin.

Collaborations and Achievements

Throughout his career, Paolo has worked on productions and remixes for internationally recognised artists including Todd Terry, GIMS (Maître Gims), Mauro Picotto, Federico Scavo and Brooklyn Bounce. Under his Giovi alias, he has continued to explore electronic music, including a collaboration with Kevin McKay on “No Scrubs,” released by Glasgow Underground.

His work as a producer and sound engineer has contributed to releases earning five Gold and two Platinum certifications from FIMI, the Italian music industry federation.

Sound Engineering, Innovation and INMONO

His expertise in mixing and mastering has been shaped in part by time spent at international recording studios, learning directly from renowned sound engineers. His ongoing interest in audio technology also led to a collaboration with Acustica Audio and, later, a role as a beta tester.

After founding BigBiz Studio in 2017, Paolo is now developing INMONO, a new music production studio project in Brescia that is currently nearing completion.

His guiding principle remains the same: to use technique, experience and innovation to bring out the unique identity of every track.
